Patton Atwood II

March 10, 1843

Dedicated to "Uncle Patten"
Namesake and only surviving child of Patten I and Anna Brooks Atwood

Mrs Nellie (Emerson) Eldredge
351 W. Grand Ave. Beloit Wis
Permanent Sec.

Roscoe, Illinois, May 10, 1928

The second edition of the Atwood Family Association book is being issued after a considerable search for complete records.

The first book was issued in 1917 by the officers, primarily through the untiring efforts of our Secretary. Nellie Emerson Eldredge, to whom we owe a great debt for as perfect a record as was possible at that time.

Most families have responded with their records in splendid manner.

Those who have not been able to greet the Atwood Clan will have to stretch their imagination to picture the scenes recorded, but with the aid of the picture, one fancies the log cabin, then the frame house, the stone house as first built, then with addition as shown, later which was remodeled as we see it today, a fine big country home adequate of storing a young army, which was done at the 60th anniversary at which time, Cousin Arvilla states, "that the 14 brothers and sisters with their parents, besides grandchildren and others stayed over nite under the roof the first time it had ever occurred."

The sketches will tell somewhat of the family customs, among which one has been related by Arvilla, of the family three seated vehicle which took a goodly portion of the family regularly to the Baptist Church at Rockton and in which place the burial lot is also located. One sees there the stones of Patten and Anna Brooks Atwood, Philip and Eliza Atwood, Willis and Etheridge, their sons, Mrs. Lydia Curry, mother of Aunt Eliza Atwood, and Mr. Burger who worked with them for years, coming from Canada in 1843, passing away in the home in 1857 at the age of 89 years. The lot being purchased to lay away Mr. Burger.

The "Old Homestead" is still in the family, coming to Melvin at the death of his father in 1926 and at which place they pass the summers in a cottage, by the cottonwood so much spoken of, down by the river.

This occasion reminds us that from Sussanna's death in 1831, there was an unbroken line for 59 years in this large family, until the death of the mother in 1890.

The recent death of Uncle John (LeMars, Iowa) Atwood's widow, Mary, March 21, 1928, leaves but one sister-in-law, Mrs. Joseph Atwood and one brother, Patten to whom we dedicate this book.

The quotation "Go West and Build up the Country" was well carried out in the past few generations in various branches. Of ancestor Joseph who was one of 13 children, his children produced large families from 11 to 17. Of Grandfather Patten's twin daughters there were born 134 direct descendants since their birth in 1830.

A noteworthy record is made of Aunt Annie Wilson's two pairs of twins, her son Charles Wilson one pair, a granddaughter Mamie Peterson's one pair, a grandson, Clifford Wilson's triplet boys adding considerably to the Wilson family. The Montgomery twins, daughters of Carrie Atwood, are a popular pair at Reunions, well worth mentioning.

What to eliminate as well as what to include has been difficult but hoping this may meet with general approval of all.

Memorable Occasions

This printed account of Patten and Anna Atwood's 60th wedding anniversary, will give the younger members of the family a little insight into the long ago.

Last Saturday a Register reporter, with 75 other invited guests, assembled at the Deacon Atwood homestead in Owen, the occasion being the sixtieth wedding anniversary of the venerable pair, on Sunday, February 14. Although the roads were well nigh impassible and the skies dark and forbidding, the joy of meeting at this truly remarkable family reunion, the memories it recalled, and the hearty welcome with which we were greeted, fully repaid us for our efforts in being present. Thinking perhaps, a brief sketch of these aged patriarchs, their family, their home and their reunions would be interesting to many of the readers of the Register, prompts me to send you the following:

Mr. Patten Atwood was born in New Hampshire in 1805, and Anna Brooks in Canada in 1808. By some mysterious and strange combination of circumstances they were permitted to meet; a mutual attachment was formed and on February 14th, 1826, they were united in wedlock, and it is well worthy of record, in these days of frequent divorces, and the easy setting aside of the marriage vow, that for sixty long years, through shadows and sunshine, in adversity and prosperity, their love and regard for each other has increased, and today, as they are nearing the setting sun of their earthly existence they have no more cause for regret, that in early life their hearts, interests and fortunes were linked together.

In 1839 they moved to this county and a year later settled on a farm which they, with their son

Philip, now occupy, situated most beautifully on the west bank of the Rock River, nine miles north of Rockford. It is a fertile farm of 400 acres, with large and comfortable improvements. The stone with which the house is built was quarried on the farm and many of them laid by Mr. Atwood's own hands. While attending the party we measured a cottonwood tree growing on the farm over which Mr. Atwood has guided the plow and which has grown from a seed within 45 years. It is 100 feet high and 16 feet in circumference seven feet from the ground. To Mr. and Mrs. Atwood 15 children have been born, one of whom died in infancy, and it is now more than 50 years since the death angel has entered his family circle and removed one of its number. They have also 49 grandchildren and 31 great grandchildren, making a total of 94 living descendants. Of the 14 children living, 8 reside in Winnebago County, 4 in Iowa, one in Wisconsin and one in Kansas. They were all at home, ate together with their parents about the same table. All lodged last Saturday night under the same roof, and all met together in Rockford today to have their pictures taken in a group. The children's combined ages is 679 years, an average of $48\frac{1}{2}$ years, and their combined weight as tested by a set of Fairbanks' scales is 2,100, or an average of 150 pounds. Nearly all the family are engaged in agricultural pursuits and their acres are numbered by no less than 4,000. But we would not estimate the worth of the family by their dollars and cents, by their lands or their merchandise, by the number of pounds they tip the balance. They are all worthy members of society. Nearly all are connected with the Baptist Church, of which their father for 45 years has been a member, and filled the office of deacon and of which their mother has been a communicant for 62 years. None of them use intoxicating liquors in any form as a beverage, or tobacco. All are Republicans to the core, and all are at peace and harmony one with another. They are all married, and the husbands and wives are all living. All with their father and mother are in good health with their reasoning faculties unimpaired.

Deacon Atwood has long made the Bible his daily study, and as a Bible student has few equals. He has read the Scriptures through, forty times by rote, an average of once every year for forty years, besides all of his miscellaneous reading. The 128th Psalm has long been to him as a divine promise with its fulfillment, and is to him a favorite selection.

Aside from the six sons and eight daughters who met at the old homestead, there were also a goodly number of grandchildren and great grandchildren, and several old neighbors, some of whom had been intimate friends for nearly half a century. An eloquent address was delivered by Rev. J. J. Phelps, of Rockton, who also invoked the divine blessing, and a poem written by Rev. I. P. Patch, of LeMars, Iowa, was read by Mrs. J. B. Atwood. The dinner, which was then served, was bountiful and faultless, and as we remained and partook of supper and breakfast, and the supply of provisions did not seem to grow less, we conclude that the resources of those who had the management of that important part of the program are inexhaustible. A pair of large, elegantly upholstered chairs were presented by the children, and a number of other gifts were given by those present as tokens of respect and friendship. After dinner Father Atwood feelingly referred to God's goodness in permitting the family all to gather again about the old hearthstone, and expressed the wish that they might all meet, an unbroken family in heaven. Other short addresses were made and many interesting reminiscences were told of pioneer life and of the changes wrought in the lifetime of our aged host and hostess. The day was one that will long be remembered by all present as one of the most enjoyable they ever experienced.

Your humble reporter in conclusion would say: Long live the Atwood family, and may their numbers never grow less, nor the honored name of their sire be brought into reproach by any act of his descendants.

January 2, 1905—Various gatherings have no doubt been held from time to time but at no stated times. Just fifty enjoyed the day at the old "Pickard Homestead" in Harlem, Illinois when upon invitation from Cousins Bert and Franc we gathered from Afton, Wis., Roscoe, Rockton, Rockford, Pecatonica and Harlem, Ill., previous to their departure for Nashua, Iowa to make their home.

January 1, 1906—Invitations to gather at the "Old Homestead" at Uncle Philip and Aunt Eliza Atwood's with Cousin Melvin and new wife Grace, as co-hosts met with a splendid response. A picnic dinner was held, a program given and a general good time enjoyed. Uncle Philips left the farm during the spring, Melvin remaining until 1908. The farm has since been leased.

July 4, 1911—The Atwoods met at the invitation of Uncle Philip and Uncle Patten and families at 210-

212 North First St., Rockford for a family gathering. Picnic dinner at noon was served between the houses under a canopy. It was thought well to organize which was done with the following officers being elected: President, Fred Pickard, Sec. and Treas. Nellie Eldredge. Eleven brother and sisters were present. The reunions will occur annually as voted.

June 21, 1921—A real memorable occasion was the reunion in which Cousin Andrew Wilson of Mt. Auburn, Iowa, took as his second wife, Miss Martha Hall. The ceremony was performed before the gathered clan by Rev. Wm. Montgomery of Manchester, Iowa and the wedding music played by the Montgomery family orchestra. (Strictly all in the family.)

June 30, 1925—Arvilla Andrus, only daughter of Aunt Sally, celebrated the 50th anniversary of her marriage to Deacon John A. Atwood of Rockford. This event followed soon after the annual reunion in Iowa. A luncheon was served the relatives and few close friends at noon following which they gathered under a canopy for the afternoon in the yard. The couple then held open house to their many friends. A program was given and many wonderful gifts were received by the couple.

June 30, 1927—The reunion at Waterloo, Iowa, Willard Hall being the 29-30th brought us again to the observance of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Atwoods anniversary. The guests presented them a souvenir spoon of Waterloo. Attention was called to the fact of the Grandfathers and Grandmothers 64th year together, of their daughter Sally who was spared nearly 64 years with her husband Joel Andrus and who were parents of Mrs. Arvilla (John) Atwood, who have now reached their 52nd year together.

ATWOOD REUNION

June 30, 1927

Dear ones gathered for reunion,
Greetings to you, one and all;
Hoary heads and prattling children,
Maidens fair and youth's grown tall
Atwoods gathered here together,
From the triplets to Uncle Joe,
For own folks and home folks,
Are the very best you know.
Here are mingled joy and sadness,
Easy laughter—easy tears,
As we each recall our memories
Backward, backward, through the years;
Each year takes some dear one from us
Travelers to that other shore,
There they wait the great reunion,
Uniting us forevermore.
Mothers, fathers, sisters, brothers,
Aunts and uncles, cousins dear,
Tho' we wander far between times
Yet we gather here each year;
First in roll call come our elders,
Dear Aunt Lizzie and Uncle Joe,
Dependent now each on the other,
Then Uncle Patten too you know.
Wilsons, Atwoods and Montgomerys
The Eldredges—both Nellie and Fred
Belshaws, Pickards and the Myers,
Down the list till all are said,
Gathered one and all together,
For morning prayers or friendly chat,
Just one family now we gather,
Atwood, please remember that.

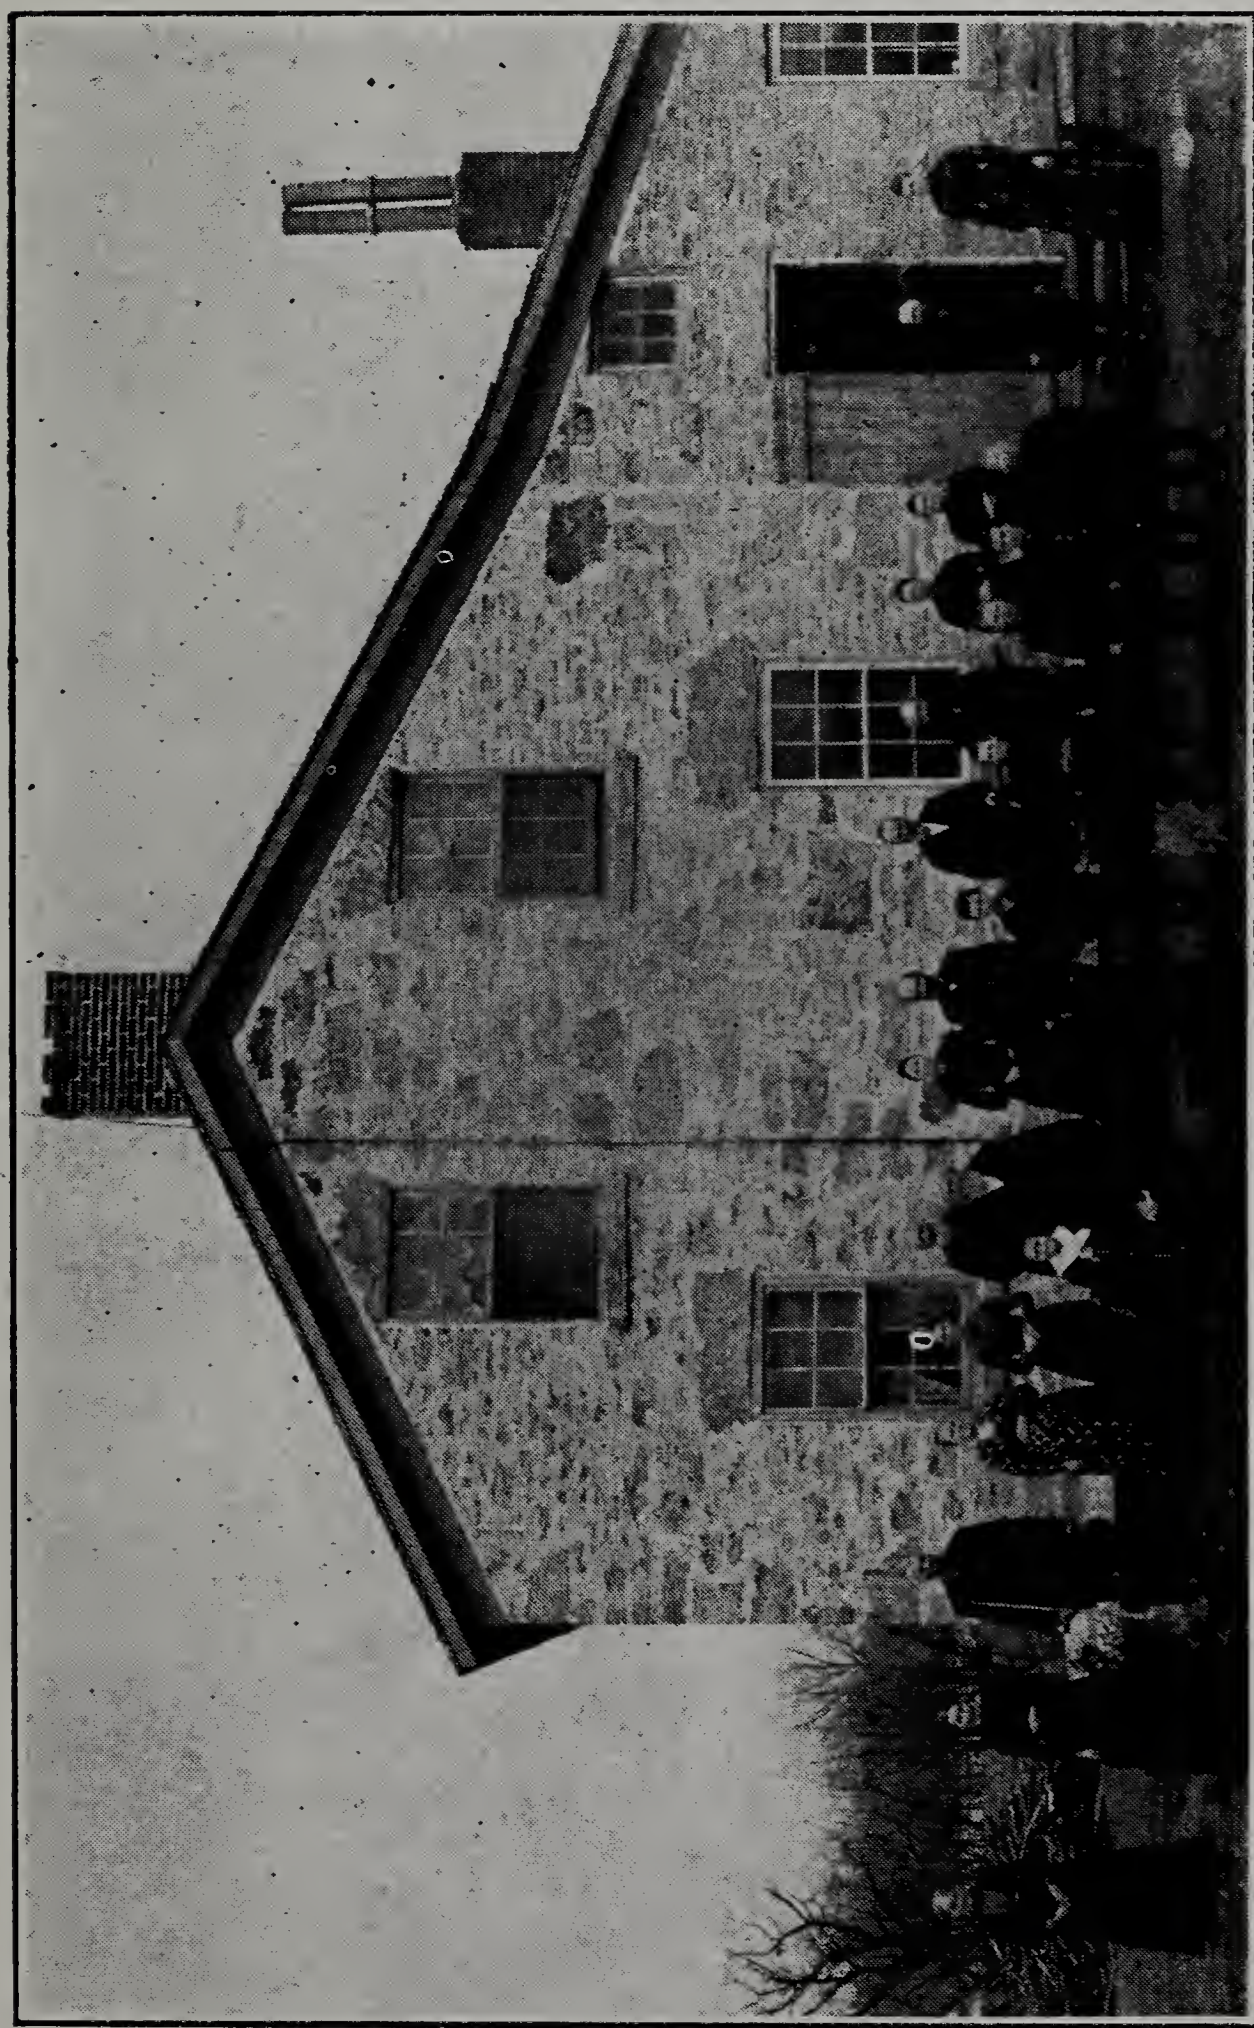

Dear ones, gathered for reunion,
What'ere the years may bring to you,
Of wealth or fame or joy or sorrow
To our traditions, each be true.
And no matter where you roam,
This I know you'll find is so,
That own folks and home folks,
Are the very best you know.

Written while enroute to reunion.

September 5, 1927—Only one other couple “Uncle Joseph and Lizzie Gleasman Atwood have been celebrants of their 50th anniversary, which was passed informally owing to advanced age and ill health.

April 28, 1928—Forty relatives of Fred and Nellie Eldredge met to surprise the former on their 25th anniversary on Saturday afternoon the 27th. Fred, president of the Atwood Family Association this year, with Nellie, former Secretary of the Association so many years were presented a handsome floor lamp. A program of music was given informally after the picnic supper.

History of the Atwood Family

It is an interesting study to go back through the musty records of the past and trace the story of the lives of our ancestry. It is pleasant to know something of what they accomplished in their day and generation, especially as in the case of ours, when we find nothing to their discredit and so much that is worthy of emulation and commendation. I am glad of this opportunity of contributing something to this permanent record, and if others, who can, will glean from their memory's pages, they too will be able to give as much along this line that will be as thrilling as a romance, and as fascinating as a fairy tale, though true in every particular.

Patten Atwood, our father, grandfather, great-grandfather, and pioneer ancestor, was a son of Joseph and Polly Atwood, who were of Puritanical stock and natives of New England. He was born in the township of Alexandria, Grafton Co., New Hampshire. His father was born on April 8, 1756, twenty years before the signing of the Declaration of American Independence. He knew of his personal knowledge of the wrongs and oppression that the colonists had to contend with, and was brought up in an atmosphere where the people longed for freedom. While we know but little of his early history you will find on pages 49, 171 and 252 of a book entitled "Connecticut Men in the Revolution" that Joseph Atwood enlisted as a private soldier, on May 7, 1775, and was mustered out on December 18, 1775, having served 7 months and 11 days in the 6th company of the 2nd Regiment of Connecticut Volunteers, which period covers the date of the Battle of Bunker Hill. He enlisted a second time on May 26, 1777, for a term of 8 months, and a third time August 18, 1780, and was finally discharged Dec. 4, 1780, this last enlistment being in the 9th Connecticut Regiment, commanded by Col. S. B. Webb. He thus had to his credit nineteen months of military service as a Continental soldier, placing his life on the altar of his country, in the great struggle for American Liberty. His first marriage was to Ruth Cross, and was celebrated February 16, 1779, and during the time which intervened between his second and third enlistments. At this time he was 23 years old, his bride four years his senior, the date of her birth being June 18, 1752. They lived together most happily for 21 years, when she died on Dec. 6, 1800, leaving no children.

We would suggest in passing that it is a splendid testimonial to the many good qualities of this noble woman, who more than a century ago passed to her reward, that but three months were allowed to elapse after her death, when the bereaved husband again embarked on the sea of matrimony. The name of his second bride was Polly Powers, and it may be that the couplet "Polly put the kettle on and we'll all take tea," had its origin in their family. She is said to have been a woman of rare beauty, culture and refinement, and this may be the secret of the source of the good looks and amiable qualities of my uncles, aunts, and cousins, for you do all "look mighty good to me." She was born October 19, 1771 and was the daughter of Nahum Powers, whose birth dates away back to April 11, 1741. The marriage of Joseph Atwood and Polly Powers was celebrated on March 5, 1801. At this time she was almost 30 years old and nearing that interesting point in life when the girls begin to feel just a little anxious as to whether or not they are doomed to become old maids. Leap year had just passed when the unexpected though happy opportunity came for her to change her name and condition in life and become, like many others who have lived after her, a Mrs. Atwood. It was a case of love at first sight, and a long courtship was very properly dispensed with. The proud and frisky bridegroom was at the date of his marriage lacking but a month of 46 years of age, and the union proved to be a happy and fruitful one. To them were born a family of seven children, four sons and three daughters, as follows: Irene, Joseph, Patten, Lura, Candace, Ira and Alfred.

They are all gone now, but the influence of their lives extends to many generations, and we do well to pause for a moment today, and consider the obligations we sustain to them, and pay them the tribute of our love and grateful homage.

In those early years, large families were considered quite fashionable, and it is worthy of note in passing, that fifty-seven children were born in the four families of these brothers and sisters, as follows:

To Grandfather Atwood—15 children.

To Uncle Joseph Atwood—14 children.

To Aunt Candace Wilson—17 children.

To Aunt Lura Warner—11 children.

It is also true that nearly all these children grew to maturity, and many of them are still living, and ranging in age from 60 to 85 years. Even some of the grandchildren, like myself, are beginning to feel the weight of many years and are no longer children, unless it be true that we have entered that period of life know as second childhood.

This early Atwood family continued to reside in New England until the year 1816, when they moved to Canada, taking their few worldly goods and their six children with them, Baby Alfred having been laid away. They were of the true type of the sturdy pioneer who carried civilization to frontier settlements, and blazed the way for others to follow. They believed that there was a better place to bring up their boys and girls than on the stony hillsides and sterile soil of New Hampshire. So they journeyed on, not knowing whither they went, until they finally halted in what was then a dense wilderness, but is now the garden spot of Canada. Here they built their log cabin, established a humble home and erected their family altar. They studied the Bible, and taught their little ones those things that in the rush, and hurry, and worry of these modern times are too often neglected, and sometimes entirely forgotten. It is from an old family Bible, now more than 100 years old in our possession at Stillman, that was read morning and evening in that cabin home, that many of the things I have been telling you this afternoon have been gleaned. Its well-worn pages give abundant evidence that it was kept, not as an ornament on the center table, but was daily read and prized as the Book of Books.

Four years pass with only those routine cares and humdrum experiences that are incident to pioneer life. The children, fed on plain and substantial food, are growing strong and some of the comforts of life for which the parents have toiled and sacrificed are just within their reach, when at the close of an ill-fated day, the husband and father is brought home in a helpless condition, the victim of a terrible accident. While assisting a neighbor to raise the frame of a barn, he was fatally hurt by being struck by a falling timber. After eleven long and weary months of patient suffering, he gathered his loved ones about him, and giving each a word of counsel and an affectionate good-bye, he commended them to the loving care of Him who doeth all things well, and then "slept the sleep that knows no waking," the spirit taking its flight from its tenement of clay on April 9th, 1821, he having reached the age of 65 years and 1 day.

The faithful wife, with a devotion to her children that was beautiful, a courage that was undaunted, and a faith that was inspiring, took up the task that the husband and father had left unfinished, and carried it forward successfully, thus redeeming the promise, "My grace shall be sufficient for thee." Five years more she labored on, and has lived to see her children reach an age when they were all independent and self-supporting. Several of them had gone out from beneath the parental roof, had married and established new homes for themselves. Among them was Grandfather Patten Atwood, who was wedded Feb. 14, 1826, a little more than six months before the death of his faithful mother, which occurred Sept. 9, 1826.

I have already spoken of the time of birth, place of birth, and date of marriage of Patten Atwood, our patron saint. Let me repeat: Patten Atwood and Anna Brooks were joined in marriage on St. Valentine's Day, Feb. 14, 1826. At this time he had just passed his twenty-first birthday, and was looking out upon life, full of hope and promise. His blushing bride was born March 20, 1808, and was a daughter of William and Lydia Brooks, whose maiden name was Lydia Simmons. It will be observed that she lacked a month of being 18 years old on her wedding day. Our young folks will be interested to know how they spent their honeymoon. I will tell you. Very soon after their marriage they went to housekeeping in the home of her parents, while the old folks improved the opportunity of going away on a sort of a wedding tour to New Jersey, where the mother formerly resided, and where she had not visited in many years. Remember, it was the middle of February when they started on their long journey with horses and sleigh. When the snow was gone they abandoned the sleigh by the wayside, and continued their journey on horseback. They visited relatives and friends in the States for several months and collected some money that was due her from an estate. The Spring was far advanced when they returned to Canada, coming home by the overland route with the team and a new wagon, which they had bought in New Jersey.

For two or three years after their marriage grandfather and grandmother made their home on a farm in Dunage, Canada, where they engaged in farming, keeping a yoke of oxen, a few cows, some sheep and poultry. It was here that mother and Uncle Henry were born. Then, in response to an urgent demand, he moved across the Thames river to the Long Woods in Exford township, some twenty miles distant, where he built a saw mill and a grist mill. In fording the river, to go to their new home, the wagon was upset and the family narrowly escaped drowning. Some of their effects were lost out; the Family Bible, thoroughly soaked, was saved. The mills were built on a small stream, which furnished the necessary power. Here the settlers brought their corn and wheat, and had their grists ground into meal and flour, many coming a long distance to have their milling done. The fact that grandfather was a miller exempted him from military service, and he kept the mill running day and night and furnished supplies for both rebels and tories and their families, during the insurrection known in history as the Canadian Rebellion, in 1834. Our folks suffered much from plunder parties and marauding bands that roamed through that section of Canada in those troublesome times.

At their Long Woods home in Exford, their next seven children, Lydia and Eliza, Susannah, William, Candace, Anna and Mary were born. It was here that little Susannah died, at the age of 3 years and 8 months, and was tenderly laid away in a little cemetery on a knoll quite near grandfather's mill pond in Canada.

Having heard of this wonderful northern Illinois country, the spirit of the pioneer again took possession of grandfather and grandmother, and after much thought and planning they decided to locate here. It required no little courage on their part to break the home ties and sever the associations that had united them so long and pleasantly with the people of that neighborhood, and seek their fortune in a new land among strangers. About the middle of October, 1839, they loaded their eight children and household effects into two covered wagons, and with two yoke of oxen, seven or eight cows and 30 or 40 sheep, started on their long, wearisome and perilous journey. We who are accustomed to annihilate time and distance by riding on swift moving railway trains, interurban cars and automobiles, can hardly realize what a journey of this kind really meant. Four hundred and fifty miles to be covered at the slow, plodding pace of oxen, with scanty clothing and covering for the children and with winter rapidly approaching, was a condition that confronted them that would cause the stoutest heart to hesitate.

But the day comes for them to start, the good-byes and the good wishes are spoken, the stock is rounded up, and the journey is begun. They are accompanied by two young men, one of whom turns back when they have reached Detroit. The other remains with them to the end of the journey and until the next spring. Winter set in early that year and there were many bitter cold days in November. While passing through Michigan the cows were stolen one night by a gang of thieves, causing a delay of 11 days and considerable worry and expense before they were recovered and the emigrants could continue their journey. During this stay, grandmother made with her needle all the little girl's woolen dresses. The cloth was woven in a hand loom, and John's father did the weaving. These dresses were cut in the style of that early day and not unlike the modern hobble skirt of these latter years. Just think of mother and Aunt Eliza and Aunt Anna wearing hobble skirts. But they surely did—more than sixty years ago.

I have already referred to the inclement weather they encountered day after day in making the journey. Some of the days were so cold that it was a difficult problem how to keep the children from freezing. The most effective plan seemed to be to place the smallest ones on a feather bed in the bottom of the wagon box, in the morning, cover them over head and heels with quilts and blankets, and at night they would come out as lively as crickets. The country taverns along the way, where they were compelled to stop and spend the nights were far from comfortable, and in some of the places they suffered as much from cold as when on the road. It was at one of these crowded road-houses that Aunt Lydia, then a little girl of nine years, was pushed and fell against a hot stove and burned her hand, making a scar which she carried to her grave.

Another difficult problem was to secure sufficient food for the stock, and the cows and sheep had to pick their way along the road. When they reached Chicago, which was then but a small town, they halted for a little while, and the cows, seeing some brooms in a barrel in front of a grocery store, began to eat the broom corn brush of which the brooms were made. This proved rather expensive fodder, as grandfather had to purchase three or four of the brooms which were damaged to satisfy the angry merchant, and these were the first brooms of this kind they had ever owned. The brooms they had used in Canada were splint brooms, made from hickory saplings. It was while on the road from Canada here, that mother celebrated her 13th birthday. Being the eldest of the family, much depended upon her in the care of the younger children. Besides, she and Uncle Henry walked a considerable portion of the way, and helped to drive the cattle and sheep, rather a weary task for children of their tender years.

The night following Dec. 1, 1839, was spent at Newberg, northeast of Cherry Valley, and in the morning of the next day they started again, having Peca-tonica as their objective point. Coming down the hill where is now located East State Street in Rockford, they met Elder Sayers, a Baptist missionary on foot going to Belvidere to preach. He told grandfather it would be impossible to cross the river, though frozen over, was dangerous even for a footman to venture on the ice. This caused the caravan to change its course and journey up the river. When near Knightsville, a Mr. William Mead, riding on horseback, overtook them, and a tentative arrangement was made for grandfather and family to spend the winter at his home near the Andrew Lovejoy farm, though their log house was located nearer the river than the present Lovejoy home.

It was quite late in the evening of that cold December day, when the tired travelers reached this farm of Fred Pickard's in Harlem township, then owned by Mr. Doolittle, where they tarried for the night. It appeals to me as perfectly fitting that we should hold this reunion at the place where grandfather and his family spent their first night in Winnebago County. These new found friends were very kind, and Mrs. Doolittle prepared for her stranger visitors an appetizing supper, and mother remembers very distinctly some of the good things on the bill of fare of that evening meal.

The next day they moved on up the river to the Mead farm, where they decided to go into winter quarters, and where sufficient feed was found for the stock. The Mead loghouse consisted of but two rooms, yet it afforded shelter for the two families, consisting of 19 persons, until the following spring. The number 19 was, however, increased to 20 on February 26, 1840, when Uncle Joseph was born. From the Mead farm they moved to the Peter Mabie place, on this side of the river, which grandfather bought, consisting of 120 acres. Here he built a log house, said to be the best at that time in that locality. The next fall he traded his farm for land across the river, which has been in the family ever since and is now owned by Uncle Philip, and is known as the "Old Homestead."

It was in the fall of 1840 that grandfather moved to the farm across the river and again settled in a log house near the stone quarry, where they lived for a number of years before the stone house was built. Here four more children were born, namely, Irene, Patten, Harriet, and John. Their youngest, Philip, was born in the stone house. In the old log house was celebrated the marriage of their eldest daughter, Sally, to Joel Andrus, on Dec. 6, 1843, Elder Russell Brayton officiating. The following spring they moved to his farm in Harlem, where their children Henry, Arvilla and Frank were born. Henry was the first grandchild, the date of his birth being Nov. 4, 1844. Henry was married to Jane Love, October 1, 1868, and to them were born three children, Edith, Claude and James, the latter having died in infancy. Edith was the first great-grandchild. She was born July 11, 1869, and was married to W. W. Scott, Dec. 6, 1897. Her little daughter, Jane Wilda Scott, was born March 23, 1911. This completes a record of seven generations, and beginning with the birth of Nahum Powers in 1741 and extending down to the present, covering a period of 171 years.

In a sketch of this kind, much has of necessity been omitted, for things of interest might be written that would fill a volume.

I have, however, only touched here and there upon incidents that I have thought might be of interest, but have followed a connected line of events running through all these years. In closing, permit me to say that among the most cherished recollections of my childhood days, was my acquaintance with Grandfather Atwood. When I was a little girl he used to hold me on his knee, and caress me most tenderly. I did love him, for I knew that I had in Grandfather a loyal and a devoted friend. My younger cousins lost much that I treasure as a sacred memory in not having known Grandfather as I did, when he was active and strong, with an elastic step and faculties that made him the peer of any man. We do well to honor his good name and imitate his worthy example.

Uncles, Aunts, and Cousins, Members of the Association meeting in honor of the Atwood name and family: GREETINGS

I am third in seniority among all the grandchildren now living, Henry and Arvilla Andrus being the two older than I; as such I pay my respects to ancestors and lay my humble tribute before their memory. I knew Grandfather Atwood as a patriarch sitting at the door of his habitation with his family about him. His children obeyed him without fear or question, respecting him as one to whom honor was due, and whom it was a pleasure to consult and obey. As a man among men, his word was unquestioned and his advice respectfully considered. Strong, capable and dignified but not contentious, forceful but not arbitrary, he might easily have become a power in public life.

He has left a heritage beyond price, a family name without spot or blemish. Nearly all avenues of life are represented in the family tree of this "good man"; Public Life and Works, Arts, Mechanics, Students and Journalists, Workers all. Should we not be proud that we have no drones?

My first recollection of Grandfather's home was in the old basement kitchen, followed by the building of the addition on the west of the older house. At time of building the main part of the home had a fireplace which was later closed up. Here they lived and spread the wedding feasts of William, Mary, Irene, and later Philip (these coming since I remember). Here was celebrated the Golden Wedding, the 55th and 60 anniversaries, and other family gatherings as we call them which seem to me now bright spots and fill the years of my boyhood. Many times we met in the grooves near the river on the Fourth of July. Great times for all with never a discordant note, all joy and happiness. I remember wondering why some shed tears at parting, now I know the desolation of life's fondest hopes. Only a few short years and our grandchildren will be the Men and Women of affairs and action.

Among the old landmarks now gone is the wooden swing which hung between two trees near where the railroad now spans the valley, gone for more than fifty years probably. Also a spring of pure water bubbling up on an island of gravel off the shore. Grandfather built a wall about this which was swept away by a great weight of ice, but doubtless the water still bubbles up from the spring as pure as of yore.

Another landmark was the great cotton-wood tree on the flat in the pasture. This grew from a cutting planted by Grandfather. I measured it in 1899 and it was then seventeen feet six inches in circumference, seven feet from the ground and a hundred feet high. From our old home in Harlem the spreading top looked like a groove itself against the background of hill and timber beyond it.

From January to April of 1912 I spent the time with Uncle John Atwood and family of Lamars, Iowa. Of the kindness and goodness of this man the half never can be told. We talked together of many things of earlier days. He told of events that happened while he was yet a boy. Told of times when Grandfather held his own against all comers answering with figures and facts concerning costs and values. He was as we would say "there with the goods." Uncle John said, "I felt proud of my father," a worthy tribute from a worthy son to a noble sire.

Since reading the address given by Cousin Arvilla I am moved to add to the paper already in your hands. Uncle Phil could probably give you dates in regard to the spring and the swing. Grandfather not only quarried the rock to build the house but burned the lime. I remember seeing the trace of fire on the face of the quarry where the kiln was built. At that time a road ran by the house, which was later taken up leaving the Homestead half a mile from the road. An incident: While the new kitchen was being built on the west, Grandfather, the carpenter, Uncle Patten, John, Philip and myself were shaving some wagon bows for Uncle Henry to go home under. - The carpenter had drawn some lines for the partitions, Uncle John and I got into a scuffle, rolled on the floor and rubbed out part of the lines. In the quarry of building stone, with its deposits of sand and gravel for this age of concrete work, Uncle Phil has a mine of wealth, for agricultural purposes and as a soil builder is in growing demand.

In conclusion, the thought comes, "what is Life?" I am Life, all that stands between ancestry and posterity. I am at the present, the moment, between the ever increasing history of the past and the never ceasing rush of the future. This solemn thought may have filled the mind of Patten Atwood as he stood, the stalwart bridegroom of his bride, Anna Brooks. He became the head of a home, the father of a numerous people. It might be said of him as it was of Abraham, "I will make thee head of a great nation, thy seed shall be as the leaves of the trees or the sands of the seashore."

I wish I could meet with you today and visit and greet you all, but I fear this may never be. Greetings and Farewell

Henry B. Atwood, eldest son of Patten Atwood and Anna Brooks Atwood, was born in eastern Canada August 24th, 1828. When he was eleven years the family removed to Winnebago County, Illinois, and located on a farm five miles south of Rockton. They made the trip from Canada via the overland unlimited ox team route. Young Henry (using the phrase of the west) was bull whacker for one of the teams.

Henry labored on his father's farm until he reached his majority. He had thirteen brothers and sisters, and it began to look like Illinois could not long maintain the family, consequently Henry thought it best that he be looking for some of Uncle Sam's Government land in the then "way out west in Iowa". Henry was a sturdy young fellow, though small in stature, and was chuck full of "I can". Some of the following data is not just clear in the writer's memory, but is copied from data furnished by others. In 1850, with his cousin Ira Wilson, with a horse and buggy borrowed from Palmer Pickard he started for Iowa. They crossed the Mississippi with a ferry boat at Fulton, landing at Lyons on the Iowa side, just a mere place in those early days, and started to the then metropolis of eastern Iowa, Hawntown. The writer well remembers the old town in a narrow valley hedged in by the Mississippi bluffs. In those days it was in the height of its prosperity; it contained a distillery, a water power grist mill, saw mill, general store and post-office, blacksmith shop and tavern, a place where you could quench your thirst, fill the inner man with the necessities of life, or rest your weary bones on a straw tick on the corded bed stead. But alas, Hawntown's balmy days are past, rival towns, that in later days secured railroads, have unsurped her glory. At Hawntown they learned of the whereabouts of Ira's brother-in-law, Peter Philip, who was living on a rented farm in Jackson County. Ira took Henry as far as Manquoket, from there he walked to Cedar Rapids looking for Government land, but did not find any, but saw the country. Henry proved himself quite a pedestrian, as forty miles a day was his usual stunt. On the last day of this hike he covered forty-five miles, but at the end of the day, when striving to pass a fence that blocked his way, he found it impossible to mount it in the usual way, but turned around and backed over it, lifting his feet over one at a time with his hands. In a week he was back at Philips. They returned to Illinois with the horse. They ate their dinner near Mt. Carroll, Illinois, and had their first cooked tomatoes. The tomatoes were unsweetened, and the first taste, of the now so popular dish, was never forgotten.

Henry worked on his father's farm in 1850 receiving one-fourth of the crop as his compensation, and started again for Iowa in 1851, this time on foot. He reached Peter Philip's on April 4th. Mr. Philip had located a piece of Government land for him, the SE $\frac{1}{4}$ of Section 30, Elk River Township, Clinton County. It snowed four inches on the fourth, and as the creeks and sloughs were so full of water they were impassable, he waited until the sixth to start to view the land. They walked to Iowa City and each pre-empted a quarter section, covering forty miles a day on this trip.

Henry cut logs in the timber on Government land and built him a house, and it is quite generally understood that he did not employ an architect. The dimensions were ten feet square, no windows, no chimney but a hole in the roof for the smoke to find its way to the outside. The roof was covered with slabs procured from the Hawntown mill nine miles away. He returned home for breaking teams and started back to Iowa in May accompanied by Reuben Irons. Each had two yoke of oxen, one of Henry's belonged to his father. They took bedding, clothes, meat, potatoes, flour etc., from home, bought an ax in Rockford, and at twelve mile grove cut hickory poles and made bows for their wagon, covering them with a woven quilt. They slept there the first night, in the morning it was raining, but they managed to keep the flour dry. The roads were in such a condition that with the four yoke team they could just get through. Reuben pre-empted land cornering with Henry's. While one plowed the other cut timber, or took a hike to Hawntown nine miles away with the dull plow lays on his shoulder, while the man at home proceeded to dull the other one. Reuben returned to Illinois in July taking his oxen and Henry's father's oxen with him. Henry stayed and worked out by the day at anything he could get to do, made his home with his nearest neighbors, McKeans, two miles away. In harvest he got a dollar a day. That fall he built a log house 16x18, one story, hewed inside and out and chinked. That winter he cut timber for fencing and went home for a visit. Reuben Irons returned with him in the spring, bringing a cow from home. The Mississippi was yet covered with ice, but unsafe for the oxen, so they left the cattle at Savannah and went on to McKean's and returned with Henry's oxen. Henry had a pair of skates, they borrowed a cutter and he shoved three loads across from Savannah to Sabula, a distance of three miles, making eighteen miles in all. He took the wagon box across and Reuben, who could not skate, brought the things to the bank and took the running gears across. They left the cattle until it broke up in the spring. It was nearly dark when they were ready to start to McKean's, twelve miles away, and so cold they must walk to keep warm. The next morning they moved to Henry's new house, put up the stove they had brought with them, and went to batching.

They hauled up the logs, split them into rails, and built a stake and rider fence around the land they had broken. Then they planted their crop, first three acres of wheat that brought them forty cents per bushel, 31 acres of corn which they tended with the oxen and sold at twenty and twenty-five cents. I don't remember the yield, but remember hearing it said that twenty-five to thirty bushels of corn to the acre was a good yield on those raw prairies. They broke more land, dropped potatoes in the furrows and in this way raised twenty bushels. They buried them in a pit in the fall and the pocket gophers kindly assisted them in disposing of them. They kept the flour under the bed, put the bows of the wagon over the bed and covered them the same as on the wagon, consequently when the rain came trickling down through the slabs the boys were dry as well as the flour. The first year Mr. Miller cut their grain with a hand rake reaper. The Miller farm was five miles east of the boys. They bound for Miller to pay for it, cut hay for themselves, changed work to get their threshing done, and did their fall plowing. Reuben bought a hundred pounds of bacon of Miller taking the lead oxen of both teams to make the trip to get it. They were used to leading and wanted to this trip, consequently they ran most of the way. The boys bound grain to pay for the bacon. They were not experienced bread makers, for them, so they made sour milk bread and baked it in a kettle set in hot ashes and covered with coals, in this way they baked enough in the morning to last them the day. They took turns cooking, when one cooked the other did the outside chores. That winter they hauled off their corn and cut more timber. The next winter Reuben returned to Illinois and married Henry's sister Eliza. Palmer Pickard helped them back to Iowa in the spring of 1853. The Irons lived with Henry three and a half years, then built on their own place. Henry batched awhile, then Candace, his sister, kept house for him until she married, then his sister Mary came. Reuben and Henry each owned a horse the latter years they were together. When Reuben moved they each kept a team of horses. Henry signed his pre-emption papers over to his father who laid a Mexican land grant on it for $135 and deeded it back to Henry. Henry batched and had different housekeepers for seven years until he was married to Henrietta Whitwood. They were married at the Atwood home. Reuben Irons lived in Iowa years, and took $16,000 back to Illinois with him. Truman Wilson married Anna Atwood, and they lived for seven years one mile from Henry's. Henry built to his house as necessity required, first another log room similar to the first, then a small frame building of one room boarded up and down and battened, these were built in a row end to end. The four eldest children first saw the light in the old log house.

In 1868 the new stone house was completed, and this was the Atwood home until 1890. Here many happy days were spent. Here the girls were married and went to homes of their own. The last five years none of the children were home except the oldest boy. They sold the farm in 1890 and bought a home in Reinbeck intending to retire from active life, as the years of hard work were beginning to tell, but the Mother passed to the Great Beyond a couple of months after the change was decided upon, and before the move was made. The Reinbeck house was sold, and Henry made his home amongst his children for several years, then went to live with his sister, Anna Wilson, in Zion City, Illinois, where he passed this life in February, 1915

Strict integrity was the maxim of this God fearing, unpretentious man. In all his long life he never tried to defraud any man, was always held in great esteem by his neighbors, and his word was not questioned in business dealings. He came from a family of high principals of honor, and anything foreign to this seemed never to enter his mind. Always a hard working man, up early in the morning, and was not content to sit idle at night until every one was through with the work. He lived in a time when to accomplish much labor was quite an honor; not like today, when to do as little as possible and to get as much as possible for that little seems to be the chief end of man. There were no automobiles in his earlier days, he had horses, but would walk to Lyons twelve miles away, wouldn't bother with a team unless there was something to bring that he could not well carry. He used to walk to DeWitt, then the County Seat of Clinton County, twenty-two miles away, transact the business of himself and neighbors such as paying taxes, etc., and then walk back home the same day. The modern man must needs have an automobile to accomplish the feat.

Not only did he labor with his hands, but for the betterment of his fellow man. Always giving a willing hand to those needing or wanting help, and his faith in the integrity of his fellow man was so sincere that he many times misplaced confidence to his financial loss. Always a church and Sunday school worker. The years when this family were together in the Clinton County home the family and the help were gathered both at the beginning and end of the day, when he read a chapter from his book of all books, the Bible, and offered a prayer to the giver of all good. One sweet memory that we shall always cherish is the devotion of the father and mother to each other. Always they seemed to have the utmost confidence in each other, and never an ill or cross word betwixt them was ever heard. The passing of that devoted wife left a blank in his life that in the twenty-five years that he survived her was always apparent.

I pray that we who survive him may leave as clear a record on the Book of Life as this humble man.

In 1924 Mr. Norton of Sanderstead Court kindly sent me several photographs, including two of the coat of arms, taken at close range when shadows brought out the detail. C. G. Attwood, 78 Bellevue St., Boston 32, made drawings from these, replacing the original stone work by an oak wreath, to be colored in pale autumn tints. You will notice the field itself is a conventional acorn. This is red. The lion is silver, as is crest and edge of field. The three acorns are golden, with base of crest red and gold. The hand itself may be flesh color or, black as if in armor. We have tried name scroll various ways, black on silver is as plain as any. The date tabs may be omitted, or last date changed to suit.

We have a few heavy sheets with this coat of arms in outline only, suitable for coloring, made by F. R. Atwood, Chicago, copy mailed for 85 cents. Or

Mr. Attwood will color one for you, in artist's colors, details to your order, for $4.85. These sheets are about 8 1-2 by 11 and may be mounted on a larger page for framing.

Orders may be sent to either E. F. Atwood, Sisseton, S. D., or C. G. Attwood.

These arms, with field sown with golden acorns, were those used by Attwood, whose family existed in Saxon times; with six acorns were in use in early Norman times. Crests are various, our branch, of County Surrey, using "cubit arm and battle axe, proper." Gloucestershire Atwoods used demi lady with golden scales and balances.

Essex, Devon and some other families of Atwood are entirely distinct, judging by arms used.
